

Spell Correction

The Spell Correction features within search configurations improve the possibility of matches in search results when a search term is misspelled or doesn't exactly match a term in the product catalog. They can be used independently or combined.

Spell Correction must be enabled in the Search Schema Editor before it can be toggled on within Search Configurations.

The screenshot displays the 'Test1' configuration page. At the top, there are tabs for 'Site Search', 'Category Suggestion', 'Product Suggestion', and 'Listing'. Below these is the 'Personalization Experience Identifier' section with a 'Personalization Exp ID' field set to '1' and a 'Factor (0.1 - 5.0)' field set to '1'. The 'Settings' section includes a 'Show Product Slicing' checkbox, a 'MinMatch (0-100%)' input set to '75', and a 'Phrase Slop' input set to '0'. The 'Spell Correction' section, highlighted with a red box, contains two toggle switches: 'Auto Correct' (disabled) and 'Did You Mean?' (disabled). Below this is a 'Field Weights' table with two rows, each having a 'Phrase Weight (1-20)' input set to '0' and a 'Delete' button. The 'Boost/Bury' section has an 'Add Expression' button, and the 'Whitespace' section has a 'Cross Field Factor' input set to '0' with a '(0-1)' range. A modal window, also highlighted with a red box, shows the 'Spell Correction' settings with 'Auto Correct' and 'Did You Mean?' toggles turned on.

No Spell Correction

In this example, the misspelling "shiirt" is entered as a search query. Since neither Auto Correct nor Did You Mean are enabled, no search results are available.

No Results: shiirt

We're sorry! No results were found matching your query.

Auto Correct

Enabling this feature ensures that if there are no results for a given search after minimum match retries, the query will automatically switch to the corrected search term.

In this example, the misspelling of "shiirt" is automatically corrected to "shirts" and results are shown for the corrected term.

Did You Mean

Enabling this feature ensures that if there are more results for an alternate query than the submitted term's query, the results page offers the alternate query as a suggested link.

In this example, the misspelling of "shiirt" has no results, so the suggested term with the next highest number of results, "shirts," is shown.

No Results: shiirt
